TO RID THE LAWNS OF WEEDS. only entirely satisfactory way is by pullvertised for destroying weeds but stands to resson that anything powerful enough to affect a weed must be equally parmful to the grass. The only way in which such an application could be used They roast the umpire every single safely and effectively is by applying it to each weed, and this involves about as the imperial council of the Ancient much labor as digging or pulling it up. Pull a weed, or out off its top below frown, and that's the end of it; therefore I advise this method as the most satisfactory one for ridding a lawn of these nests. But of course such a method cannot be applied to a large lawn, or one would be spending nearly all his time fighting woods. Much can be done to lessen the hances of injury from these intruders y so feeding the sward that it will get and keep the start of them. Encourage it to "shool" out so thickly that ordinary weeds will not be able to establish themselves among it, or will be choked death by its luxuriant development. As was said in the article of last month where lawn-making was treated, great eare ought to be taken to procure only perfectly clean seed. But, with all possible precautions against them, weeds will ome in, and such aggressive and peristent ones as thistles, dandelions and dock only can be kept down by pulling or outting, or so feeding the grass that its uxuriance makes their presentce hardly noticeable.-From "Making the Country Home," by Eben E.
